be produced in Russia, as well as GreeceRomaniaand other Orthodox countries. So the Father, Son, and Spirit are earthly forms of eternal principles, while we can vaguely grasp the Trinitarian being of God in a more cosmic context as the originative, self-unfolding, and all-uniting ground of all beings. In many images, the figure of the Son supplants the Father, so a smaller portion of the person of the Father is depicted.

Part Five looks at the work of modern Roman Catholic writers, from Karl Rahner to Peter Phan, noting an increasing acceptance of religious diversity in that more conservative tradition. I do have some doubts about his method. In the words of Catholic theologian Thomas O'Meara, "creeping infallibility," that is, the belief that everything said by the pope or a Vatican congregation is incapable of error, accomplishes for Catholic fundamentalists what the biblical page does for Protestant fundamentalists.
