The traditional explanation is that it was a question of Soviet prestige and honor. In contrast, the German armed forces, the Wehrmacht, was a shadow of its former self. Ironically, the Soviets' use of tanks in the street fighting was not dissimilar to the tactics used so disastrously by the Germans in Stalingrad. The maps in this book were not that helpful or clear in my opinion unless you are familiar with the details. Though the first wave of Soviet troops was generally considered to be disciplined, it was the second that indulged in orgies of rape and violence, fuelled by large stocks of alcohol found in the city.
